

Review: Busy Fingers™ Fidget Lap Pad by Fun & Function

15
FLARES

I received this item to facilitate this review; all opinions are my own.

A difficult problem for kids with sensory issues is sitting still. And while I'm no fan of long swaths of sitting still (especially in school!), there are times when a little less squirming comes in handy, like during a hair cut or a performance. Obviously, we parents do what we can to limit the time our kids with autism or SPD or ADHD need to sit still, but it's great to have a little help with this. The Busy Fingers™ Fidget Lap Pad by Fun & Function is designed to help with that problem.

THE GOOD

Ha, the kids loved this toy! Both Amelia and Zoe enjoyed and this morning, I gave it to Zoe as she was having trouble getting organized to leave for school. What happened? I reveal in the video:

THE BAD

My daughter has a thing about pillow cases, especially ones that zip, and so I'm hard pressed since the day I brought it home to find the 2 items at the same time. Still seems to work fine for her using either side, but I'm a little Type A about the whole thing myself...

OVERALL OPINION

This is a great tool for fidgety kids. It also has a soothing amount of weight for little kids so it's great to position in their lap to keep them on target. I can imagine this being great for a car ride too – Zoe goes through periods where even a 20 minutes trip can bother her, and judging how distracted this was today, I think it would be a great addition to our backseat.

Busy fingers is available at Fun & Function for $34.99, and is ideal for kids who need tactile stimulation so they can focus.

This entry was posted in autism spectrum disorder, parenting special needs, reviews on November 19, 2013 [<http://mom-blog.com/2013/11/review-busy-fingerstm-fidget-lap-pad-fun-function/>] .
